MINING CAMP OF ROYSTON IS GROWING RAPIDLY

Harding Ready to Assist in Bringing Relief to Ex-Soldiers

MANY DISCOVERIES ARE BEING MADE IN NUMEROUS SECTIONS

Royston, formerly known as Hudson, is a brightly mining camp in that promises to grow to maturity at a dizzy rate. Where there was little doing six weeks ago, there is now a block of ground being prospected under the leasing system, there are today fully 40 tents dotting the hills, with close to 100 men feverishly prosecuting operations. To make the scene the more stirring, there has been established a general store and wood yard by John Luce, while a boarding house will be an established fact by tomorrow.

Ground within a radius of four miles in every direction from the mine of the rich discovery made by Betts and associates on the Golden Eagle claim has been staked and the prospector is reaching out even farther than that. The whole district is teeming with activity and from 15 to 30 automobiles can be seen in the district daily. Tents appear as if by magic and it is evident that a mining district of permanency is in the making.

Royston lies 25 miles north of Tonopah and seven miles northeast of Crow Springs in the San Antonio district, and it is from the last-named place that the new camp receives its supply of water. The district is in Nye county, about one mile this side of the Esmeralda county line, and Nye county in due time will profit in a substantial manner through tax receipts from the mining produced, as well as from other sources.

The history of Royston reads like a fable. Ten years ago the Hudson Mining company was producing heavily of high-grade ore, yet little was heard concerning the district. There was a reason for maintaining secrecy, as another company owned property and there was a conflict of titles, yet the ore that was shipped from the 300-foot shaft brought average returns of from $2500 to $3000 in carload lots. After years of effort a consolidation of the Hudson and Walker Brothers holdings was effected, and W. H. Royston, the moving spirit in the adjudication of matters, began planning for a campaign of mine building.

From the 300-foot shaft a production of nearly a quarter million dollars was made from above the 200 level. The vein faulted at the 300 level, but it has since been found in its true course. Another shaft was sunk for 100 feet, yet not one foot of drifting was performed. In a tunnel that was driven into the hill a fault in the vein occurred, but through the efforts of Mr. Royston it has again been picked up and a splendid vein of ore is exposed.

The real sensation that brought Royston into prominence occurred less than two months ago when C. F. Betts, who had been prospecting on the Golden Eagle vein, uncovered a body of high-grade ore that shows chlorides and which has since been
